

A Message from Dan Manginelli

Are You Playing Business Jenga?

Have you ever played the game Jenga? You stack blocks into a rectangular tower and take turns pulling blocks from one spot and placing them on top of the tower until the whole thing comes tumbling down. In our constant quest for success we quickly solve challenges for the immediate fix without making changes within ourselves to maintain a strong foundation. We set the same problem on top of the other problems hoping it won't make its way back. But with holes in the foundation the same issues will pop up again and ultimately the whole thing will collapse. We all like to think that we learn best from our own mistakes yet in our haste to move forward we are sometimes quick to solve and slow to learn.

This week, don't just solve the immediate challenge; take the time to understand how it happened. What part of the problem is your responsibility and how can you be part of the solution? Success is not a short-term fix and it doesn't always revolve around you. True success lies not only in how you improve but also how you can help others be their best. Don't just pull the piece from the bottom and set it on the top. If a piece gets removed replace it with another stronger piece to create a foundation you can continue to build on. Be your best not just for yourself this week, but also for those around you and really make this week count!

Sincerely,

Daniel Manginelli - Founder/Owner
